INVESTMENT AND ECONOMIC SNAPSHOT

OCTOBER 2023

HIGHLIGHTS

- In October, financial markets faced significant challenges, as rising bond yields had a negative impact on both stocks and bonds.
- Despite concerns about potential disruptions in oil supply due to the Israeli-Hamas conflict, oil prices fell during the month. On the other hand, increased geopolitical risks drove up the price of gold. The U.S. dollar also benefited from increased demand as a safe haven currency, and due to the stronger economic conditions prevailing in the U.S.
- Australia's economy continued to perform better than expected. However, there is uncertainty about the future path of inflation, driven by factors such as a potential rebound in headline inflation, primarily due to higher oil prices, and a steady increase in prices for core services. Additionally, the robust domestic job market contributes to this uncertainty.

OCTOBER KEY DEVELOPMENTS

MIXED MARKET CONDITIONS CONTINUE

In October, the ongoing market downturn that has marked the past quarter persisted. Bond markets faced significant challenges as stronger than anticipated U.S. economic data led to an increase in bond yields in the U.S. and several other major economies, including Australia. This sharp rise in yields had adverse effects on stocks and bonds which fell for the third consecutive month.

Surprisingly, despite heightened oil supply risks stemming from the evolving Middle East crisis, oil prices saw a decline in October. This drop suggests that concerns about reduced demand outweighed worries about potential supply disruptions.

Conversely, escalating geopolitical tensions pushed up the price of gold, making it the best-performing asset class for the month. Notably, this latest rally occurred even as real bond yields (government bond yields adjusted for inflation) had been trending higher for the past two weeks. Traditionally, higher real bond yields tend to weigh down on gold prices, making these recent moves a departure from the norm.

The U.S. dollar also saw gains due to increased global demand as a safe haven currency and its stronger economy compared to other regions. It was the only other asset to stay above the falling tide.

U.S. ECONOMY CONTINUES TO DEFY WIDESPREAD PREDICTIONS

In contrast to European economies that have slowed in response to rapid interest rate hikes, the U.S. economy continues to defy widespread predictions that it would lapse into a recession later this year. In the most recent third-quarter GDP report, the US displayed robust economic growth, surging from 2.1% in the previous quarter to an annual rate of 4.9%, surpassing the expected 4.5%. Moreover, the latest U.S. job openings report brought a surprising increase in job opportunities, rising from 5.4% to 5.8%. Unemployment remains low but inflation remains elevated and a constant headache for the Fed and other central banks.

It is worth noting that if inflation continues to trend down towards the Fed's 2% target, and economic growth moderates in the upcoming quarter, the Fed is still likely to maintain current interest rates in the range of 5.25-5.5%. However, should economic data present a more resilient picture, one or two more rate hikes remain a possibility to ensure inflation returns to the desired 2% over the long run.

AUSTRALIAN ECONOMY SURPRISES AMID UNCERTAINTY

In Australia, although the economy may not feel like it is firing on all cylinders, economic data has consistently outperformed the Reserve Bank of Australia's predictions. Notable examples include second-quarter economic growth, which reached 2.1% versus an expected 1.6% year-on-year, and September unemployment, which stood at 3.56% instead of the expected 3.7%.

Regarding inflation, it has significantly decreased compared to levels from a year ago. Nevertheless, uncertainty looms over its future trajectory, driven by factors like a potential rebound in headline inflation, primarily due to higher oil prices, and the steady rise in prices for core services, coupled with the enduringly strong job market.

In addition to mixed domestic conditions, escalating geopolitical risks in the Middle East have contributed to recent spikes in market volatility.

CHINA STIMULATING GROWTH

Shifting our focus to China, the emphasis has moved from controlling inflation to stimulating economic growth. The Chinese government recently announced the issuance of a special government bond worth one trillion yuan, marking the first such issuance in over two decades. While China faces numerous challenges, especially in its property sector, this infusion of government spending holds the potential to revitalise the country's sluggish economy.

OUTLOOK

We anticipate that bonds will provide reasonable income over the next 12 months, as well as strong diversification qualities, should the global economy approach a recession in 2024. It is noteworthy that a decline in bond yields to about 2-2.5% could yield returns greater than 20% for government bonds if and when central banks pivot to a more supportive framework.

Presently, our position on equities is to be underweight, but we continue to remain open to opportunities that more attractive prices may present. Recent declines of over 10% in various equity markets have increased the attractiveness of equities in the short term, however, we remain vigilant to weakness in global economies, especially as the impact of higher cash rates continues to eat into savings.

It is essential to acknowledge that accurately pinpointing the onset of a recession is a challenging task. However, if history serves as a guide, the possibility of a recession emerging towards the middle of next year appears increasingly plausible and remains our base case.

Given the multitude of risks currently circulating in the financial system, we continue to pursue a defensive investment strategy with a primary focus on protection while seeking opportunities to enhance performance when they arise.
